CHAPTER V

CONCLUSION AND SUGGESTION

A. Conclusion

Psychoanalysis employed the ideas of conscious and unconscious motives to understand human behavior and habits from two different angles. Both played a crucial part in comprehending why people behave the way they do in real-world social interactions as well as in deeper contexts, and these two factors are crucial in determining how people behave, act, and interact. These two elements interact with each other and have a significant impact on our daily lives. The writer discovered the following 30 data from stranger things after examining the previously written chapter: The fourth season of the TV series can be summarized as follows:

1. Due to her character development in each of her events, eleven is a significant and dynamic character who can also be rounded. In the series, 30 total data which is divided into 10 data that affects the behavior of the main character and 20 data that impacts the behaviour of the main character.

2. Due to effects from her background, Eleven reacts to everything from the outside in a certain way. The following elements can be taken into consideration in this study. Understanding a character's conscious motivations makes it easier to identify the distinct causes and objectives of their actions. These easily explicable personal aims, objectives, and goals may be a part of this conscious motivation. For instance, a character can attempt to succeed in their career or achieve a specific goal. Unconscious motivations that can be connected to internal conflicts must also be considered in the investigation. These hidden motivations frequently result from past events, trauma, or hidden psychological aspects. This comprehension of internal struggle explains why characters sometimes act or feel in ways that don't seem to correspond with their consciously motives. While, unconscious motivations can affect a character's behavior and feelings without them being aware of it. Finding the situation or trigger that sets off the unconscious response—which could manifest as a powerful emotional response or an impulsive action—is crucial to the study. The entire data found on the impacts of unconscious motives are 20 data found on the main character.

B. Suggestion
