

CHAPTER V

CONCLUSION AND SUGGESTION

A. Conclusion

After analyzing 40 data of the types of Relative Clause to be sample of data analysis, the writer has inference based on references for composing this research. The writer found the differences between Restrictive and Non-Restrictive Clause, they are

1. Relative Clauses have two different types; they are Restrictive Clause and Non-Restrictive Clause.
2. The differences between Restrictive Clause and Non-Restrictive Clause are the existence of comma. There is no comma in Restrictive Clause it means that the information about the noun is important to identify, while in Non-Restrictive Clause it has comma which means that it is just additional information. Then, the information about the noun in Restrictive Clause cannot be omitted from the sentence, while in Non-Restrictive Clause; the information about the noun can be omitted from the sentence since it is just additional information.
3. The types of Relative Clauses that mostly exist in two parts of Paper Towns novel is Non-Restrictive Clause.
4. Patterns of language in expressing clauses syntactically are different. Language has different ways in the expressions though having the same purposes.

B. Suggestion

After analyzing and giving conclusion of the differences of restrictive and non-restrictive clause in Paper Towns' novel, the writer has some suggestion to the readers related to the paper.

1. For readers, it is suggested that the students of English Department should also read it in order to get knowledge and to increase their perception. In writing, the writer should not only know the relative clause, but they also have to know the differences between those types of relative clause.
2. For the colleges, they should teach more detail about this subject, and provide the books which related to this research in order to increase about the types of relative clause in different media.
3. For other researcher, hopefully, this research can provide the information and become one of reference for the next research with some topics, and make it into the further research.