

CHAPTER V

CONCLUSION AND SUGGESTION

A. Conclusion

Based on the research and data analysis about the endophora references in the novel The Strange Case of Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde, the author would like to draw a conclusion succinctly. The Strange Case of Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde contains endophoric references, anaphora dan cataphora.

The reference that most often appears is the anaphora reference. The anaphora reference is indeed the form of reference that we most often encounter when reading because of its textual nature, primarily in the form of personal pronouns. Because the usage of personal pronouns in reading is influenced by a number of factors, such as age, social standing, and familiarity, as the author uses them in this passage.

Additionally, the author makes an effort to introduce the traits of the characters in the narrative by using personal pronouns. This is so because a novel is a narrative text, and a storyline cannot be told without characters. Every section of the novel

Naturally, it will be relevant to the characters being told, thus the author of the novel will undoubtedly use numerous personal references to give details about the characters. It also creates a novel.

Due to the few word redundancies and the dialogue being brief, straightforward, and concise, this is simple to grasp.

B. Suggestion

Based on the conclusion that has been described above, the author gives some suggestions. The suggestion is:

1. To the students

So, students do not just read but understand the forms and types of references that are embedded in the reading. And, later interested in doing further research in the same field regarding references. Or maybe you will be interested in examining the form of the exophora reference, which is situational, so that research on both endophora and exophora can be balanced.

2. To the Lecture

The lecture on linguistics, especially in semantics in the discourse analysis should pay attention in deep to the form of reference that is always we encounter in our lives, likewise in talking or reading. And typically to the both of endophora and exophora. Because it's an easily science to understand. So, the other student feel interest to make this as their next research.

3. To the Reader

Author has a desire to the reader to read a whole sentence in this paper, because its already contains to what their searching for about the reference. And, they can use this research as their reference to the next study.

4. To the author

As the author from this research, I hope this will be a good paper to the all readers. And the readers willing to use this study as their reference.
